The Allied occupation of Japan at the end of World War II was led by General Douglas MacArthur, the Supreme Commander of the Allied Powers, with support from the British Commonwealth. Unlike in the occupation of Germany, the Soviet Union was allowed little to no influence over Japan. This foreign presence marks the only time in Japan's history that it has been occupied by a foreign power.

After 1947, the occupation rapidly scaled back its programs of democratization and sweeping institutional change. Policymakers in Washington, insistent that Japan be rehabilitated as a U.S. ally in the developing Cold War in Asia, dictated a substantial shift in occupation policy from reform to reconstruction. As the focus shifted to economic recovery and social stabilization, the occupation supported Japanese remilitarization, led crack-downs on left-wing politicians and union activists ...
